FROM MR MAREE'S DESK...

Parents, how many times have you heard this? I'm not good at swimming! I can't read a book with these many pages! I don't know how to tie my shoes! I'm not a math person! These children are labeling themselves at not being good at something. Look at how you can easily be limiting yourself! Cutting yourself off from an entire ability! And it's not true! You can do math. You do it all the time. You are just giving yourself permission not to try. You are protecting yourself from the hurt of failure. Popping the word "YET" onto the end changes the whole dynamic of the sentence. It reframes the negative feelings within those statements and transforms it into a more positive self-image. Try this: I'm not good at swimming.... YET, I can't read a book with this many page.... YET. I don't know how to tie my shoes.... YET. Your child may not be good at any of these things currently and by placing YET at the end of the sentence you add a breath of hope into the failure they are feeling.
